GIRLS SKILLED WITH THE GUN.

Two City Branettes Shooting Woodcock on the Wing on the Pocono Slope.

Two handsome and dashing city brunettes, at one of the hotels of the Pocono slope, near here, became voluntary heroines in a rural sensation that interested many of the other guests. One afternoon while the girls were shooting at targets in the grove, a gentleman acquaintance came along with three brace of woodcock that he had just shot in front of a resident sportsman's setter, and the sight of the plump birds led one of the girls to declare that she could shoot a woodcock on the wing if he could. Anyhow, she was going to try it, she said, before another week passed away, and the other maidens laughed at her.

That night she found out where the owner of the setter lived, and the next day she stole away, called on him, got him to give her a lot of information about woodcock shooting, took notes of what he told her and borrowed his dog for the following Thursday. From him she also learned that the birds were pretty plentiful in the corn fields down in the Paradise valley, two or three miles from where she was staying, and that it would probably be better for her to try her skill there than in a rough locality. When she got back to the hotel she told four girls and two gentlemen what she was going to do on Thursday morning, and she began right away to fix up a nunting costume for her-

Delightful weather favored the plucky maiden, and there was a good deal of a stir around the hotel right after breakfast on the morning in question. Her four girl friends climbed into a seatless lumber wagon filled with clean straw, and were full of jollifica-tion and excitement over the event. Then the rosy checked bird shooter tripped out with a double barreled shoogun across her arm and the eager setter at her heels. Sho with a double barreled shorgun across her arm and the eager setter at her heeks. See wore a neat checked skirt that came to the tops of her boots, a red jersey and a brimless tops of her boots, a red jersey and a We were unfortunate enough to meet with an accident yesterday forenoon, whereby our heater and a portion of our building were wrecked, but the damage is much less than appears to look at it, and we shall immediately repair it and be in running order again inside of ten days, as a carridge belt and a game bag. The two carbines but the heater and its connections that a field glass, and as the wagen rumbled down the ravine and past the farmhouses all of them tried to talk at once. stood by the fence. Nervous tingers quickly took the glasses from their cases and brought them to bear on the waving corn, and then the bars were let down and the handsome huntress and her eager dog entered the field, It was easy for the others to keep track of the red jersey between the rows, and the quartet of beauties looked through their glasses and

After a little while there was a sound of whirring wings, a flash of gray feathers in the such ght above the corn tassels, a crack, a puff of smoke and the red jersey was motionless for a moment. None of the party supposed that the daring brunette had hit the bird, and in a jiffy one of the girls sang out in a musical voice from

"Try again, door; you may have better luck next time," and then they all laughed. For a minute or so the huntress kept still, but when she spoke it was to the point. Her soprano voice didn't trembie a particle as she sang out:

"Of course, I'll try again, but don't be in too big a fret about it, piense! See bere!" and she held a dead woodcock far enough above the corn tops for them all to see it. The girls didn't laugh then, but one of them said to the others:

shel" And they all agreed. Then the red jersey went out of sight, and for an hour none of them got a glimpse of it. During that time they heard the fair shooter's gun crack half a dozen times, and after awhile she emerged from the field with five birds in her game bag.

A Change for the Better

On the return trip one of the girls exclaimed:

"Well, I don't care! I've hit the target just as often as you have, and if you can shoot birds on the wing I can."

"Who cares if you can."

A Change for the Better.

I deretofore passengers who did not care to take the Pullman sleeper on "Train 25" of the Vandaha and Pennsylvania route, but occupied the coaches on that train, were required to change cars at the reflection. "Who cares if you have hit the target! I guess you'll find that hitting a bird on the property of the care of things has just been put into effect by this papular line which does away with this annoyance. Hereafter this train, which is so well known as "I th, and see how cheap you'll feel when the bird gets away," was what the huntress sud in reply.

But the other maiden did try it on the following week, and she didn't give up until she had shot three woodcock in front of the same dog. Both girls have been out shooting three or four times since them, and their skill with the shotgun made them very popular among the crowd of bearders up there.—Swiftwater thanks of the crowd of change.
